The delegate of Bayern Munich has confirmed that they are opening a formal review into their president’s dealings with privately owned clubs and promised to protect their 50+1 model and share the results with their members. FC Barcelona officially recognises their action and respects the decision.

However, one of the main reasons this act was caught is that the club's fans could demand an investigation and act on the outcome. That is not a courtesy from the club but rather an example of what happens when the fans have real power.

Now, if Bayern Munich were a club where the owner, president, sponsor, and decision-maker were the same person or organisation. There would be no review to call for because there is no one to call for it. No members to consult or approve.

We are not taking names; we don’t need to. Everyone in this committee knows which clubs have a Sudkurve that can hold the leadership accountable and which don’t.

Barcelona stands with Bayern Munich’s members through this review, and we will be watching closely, as every delegate should.
